

Students with disabilities

Students with disabilities face many additional challenges in managing their daily lives, which can make it even more difficult to succeed in higher education. To address these issues, universities today offer a variety of supports to ensure that students with disabilities have the same opportunities and chances as all other students.

Basic information: According to the 21st Social Survey of the German Student Union (DSW), 11% of all students have a health handicap. These are long-term physical, psychological, mental or sensory impairments which, in interaction with attitudinal or environmental barriers, prevent participation in society.

Financing: To begin with, it should be checked whether it is possible to receive an education sponsorship according to the Federal Education and Training Assistance Act (Bundesausbildungsförderungsgesetz, BAföG). For some students, it is possible that other funding institutions will finance the studies. In the case of disability-related additional expenses during the course of studies that are not taken into account by BAföG, the entitlement to social assistance, which is regulated in the Twelfth Social Code (SGB XII), applies under certain conditions.

Place and location of study: Information about the university and the place of study is indispensable for the start of studies or a later change. Furthermore, it is not possible to study the chosen subject as a disabled person or chronically ill person at every university. A visit to the location and the university should be part of the preparation, and the student counselling service can give further tips on choosing a subject. Other important contacts are the university's "Representative for Disability Issues", the social counselling centres of the student unions and the student representatives.
