Further funding opportunities

Even if funding from one of the 13 foundations for the promotion of the highly talented students is a possible option, there are many other foundations from the private sector and civil society that also offer scholarships. These institutions often provide stronger incentives and are usually interested in specific disciplines among their applicants. The Volkswagen Foundation, for example, awards scholarships to students studying technical subjects. Below you will find a list of various foundations and funding institutions that grant scholarships:

Economy:

- Thomas Gessmann-Stiftung: The income from the capital of this foundation is intended to support gifted students from Baden-Württemberg in the subject areas of: Electrical Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, Process and Environmental Engineering, Information Technology and Computer Engineering, Surface Engineering and Materials Science, Physics and Physical Engineering, who additionally lack the financial resources to receive an education at a (technical) university that matches their abilities.

City foundations:

Various cities offer grants for young people who want to study. It's best to check with your local municipality to see if there are any programmes of this kind. A first point of contact is always the website of your local authority. Furthermore, university towns offer special support programmes for students in their area; here, too, it is worth searching on the internet.
